The symbol which appears in the NATIONAL VANGUARD logotype is the Life Rune. It comes from an ancient alphabet, or futhark, used in northern Europe for many centuries before the general adoption of the Roman alphabet. The Life Rune signifies life, creation, birth, rebirth, and renewal. It expresses in a single symbol the raison d'etre of NATIONAL VANGUARD and of the movement of Aryan renewal.

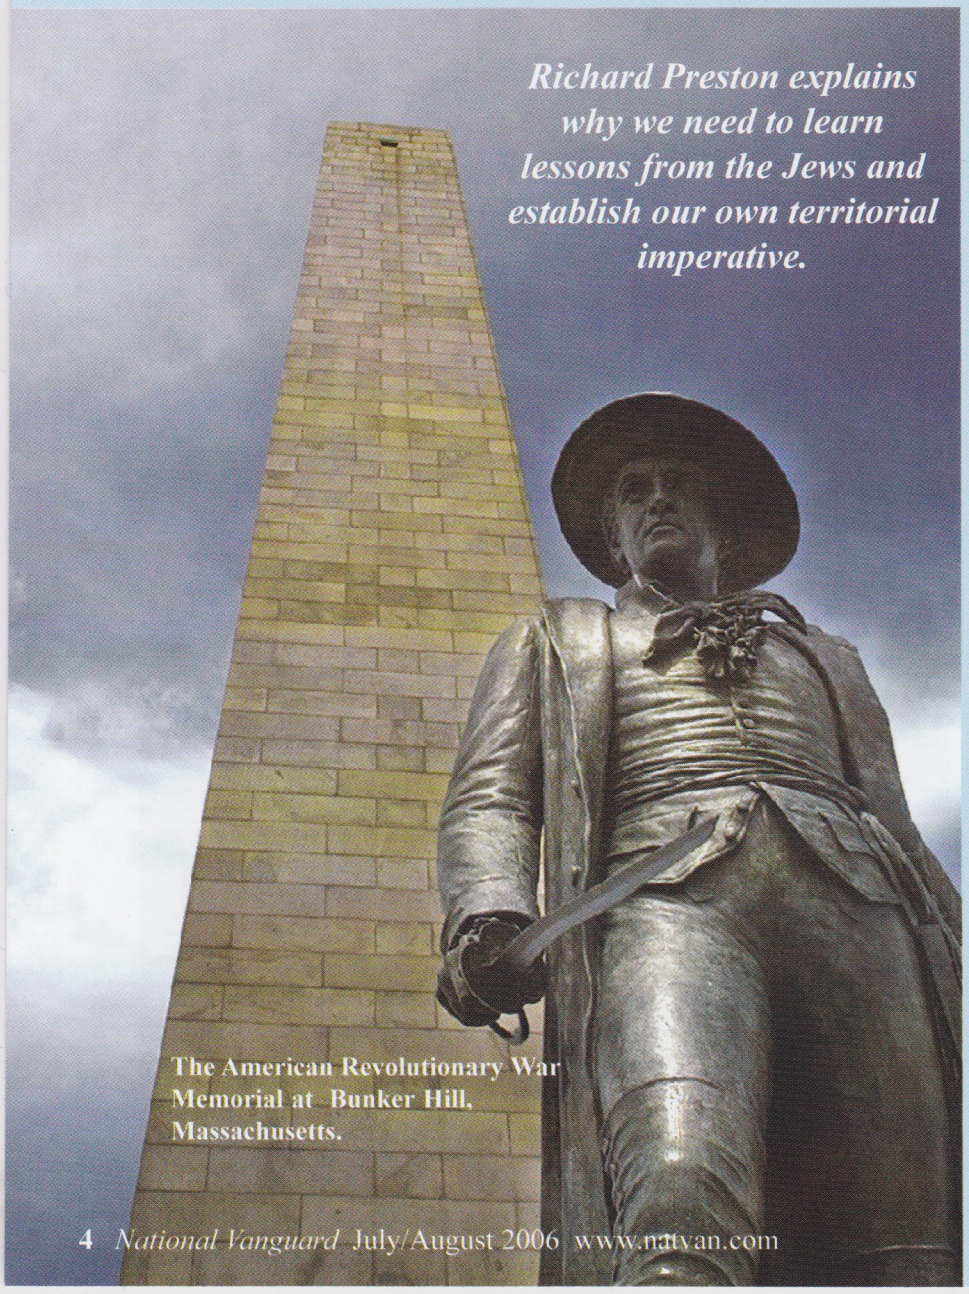
Blood and Soil: Why Race Needs Territory

All viable nations are built on two pillars: their genetic stock and a defined territory. Never in all of history – and never in the future either – will a genuine nation exist which is not based on this fundamental truth and Law of Nature.

It is this concept, of "blood and soil," which runs through our race's history like the proverbial golden thread. Genes and territory are both necessary for our type to survive — and both are currently under attack, all over the world where our type exists.

"Blood and soil" is not, as our enemies would like to have the world believe, a "Nazi" concept. It existed long before it was used by the National Socialist government in its lexicon, and has been used in many other instances since then as well.

Ironically, it is the one group who claim to oppose the Nazis the most – the Jews – who are the world's greatest exponents of "blood and soil," and it is therefore worthwhile to study the Jewish version of genes and territory, to drawn lessons and comparisons.



Richard Preston explains why we need to learn lessons from the Jews and establish our own territorial imperative.

The American Revolutionary War Memorial at Bunker Hill, Massachusetts.

The Genetic Origin of Judaism

As readers of National Vanguard magazine will know, there is a defined genetic basis for Judaism (see National Vanguard magazine #128). This is the first pillar upon which Jews have structured themselves: a genetic commonality, no matter where in the world they find themselves.

Their strict rules on who can become a Jew and who cannot, were specifically designed to make sure this genetic distinction remained as pure as possible, so that, even after 2,000 years, Jews from all over the globe, Ashkenazim or Sephardim, still share a 77% genetic commonality.

Even during the Diaspora, when Jews were scattered to the four winds by avenging Romans after they had been betrayed and many of their number cruelly murdered by the Jews — who they had themselves invited to occupy their land in the first place — Jews ensured that the two basic fundamentals for their continued existence, genetic community, and territory, were adhered to as far as possible.

They did this by making the rule that only a person born of a Jewish mother is a Jew, and secondly, by ensuring that they remained as geographically isolated as possible from their hosts.

In this way, the now famous 'ghettoes' sprang up – but it is important to remember that these were entirely voluntary and self-

imposed and, initially at least, not dictated by the their hosts in Europe. Finally, in the late 19th Century, Zionism emerged amongst Jews.

This movement (which also saw Judaism split from its traditional allies, the Muslim world — the co-operation between Islam and Judaism in the pre-Zionist era contrasts today with the enmity between those two groups, but that is worthy of a separate study), was the logical consequence of the Jewish drive towards blood and soil.

For the Jews realized that ultimately, if they were going to protect their genetic purity, they had to occupy significant territory, and not just rely on ghettoes (or as they like to call them nowadays "Jewish neighborhoods") surrounded by the ever present possibility of miscegenation and the subsequent weakening of their gene pool. Thus it was that the Zionists actively co-operated with the National Socialist government in Germany, even to the point of helping to draw up the famous Nuremburg Laws, which defined who was a Jew and who was not.

The Lesson We Can Learn

Anthony Jacob, the author of the book White Man, Think Again, once famously remarked that the reason why the Jews hate Adolf Hitler so much, is that they, for the first time, looked in a mirror and saw an Aryan version of themselves, and got such a fright that they have never stopped screaming since.

There is far more truth to this comment than at first meets the eye. In fact, the survival of our race depends entirely upon us adopting and using the tactics which Jews have used to ensure their survival: genetic commonality and territory.

While some in the White Nationalist movement might be aghast to hear this, it needs to be said: we need to be more like Jews (without the negative aspects, such as their group criminality, deviousness and the multitude of other unpleasant attributes), but in the sense that we need to start, right now, practically executing an adherence to the concept of blood and soil.

In a small way, Whites already respond positively to the concept of an own territory. This is, after all, exactly what the phenomenon of 'White Flight' is all about – Whites seeking the sanctuary of neighborhoods and suburbs which contain their own type, rather than racial aliens who make it impossible for them to live any sort of normal life.

Geographic Isolation

We need, however, to take the unconscious, but widespread, phenomenon of White Flight and turn it into something conscious and real. In other words, we need, as a first step, to start building our own ghettoes – our own White ghettoes. This is a first, vital step, which is an absolute prerequisite for our continued survival, particularly as all our nations in North America and Europe are subjected to ever increasing Third World immigration.

Somewhere amongst our ranks, or potential ranks, are people who have property, who run businesses that employ significant numbers of people. What we need is property – defined geographical areas – and incentives for our people to move to those areas (generally speaking, work opportunities are the only real drivers for such a process, hence the need for entrepreneurs to make the first move).

These White ghettoes must not be the 'compounds' of the past, such as the failed 'Aryan Nations' experiment in Idaho, which only attracted a large number of misfits looking for free accommodation. We need genuine communities with working, productive people.

This is not an impossible dream: there are literally thousands of small towns across America that already have the basic infrastructure. All they need is an influx of solid, pro-White, and activist families, and they will soon start growing and find themselves transformed into our own ghettoes. As the population increases, so will the demand for products and services, and it will become a self-fulfilling goal.

The urgency of creating such territorial initiatives cannot be understated – recent census figures have put the U.S. White population at only 66 percent, and sliding fast. This does not mean that our numbers are decreasing, in America at least, but rather the non-White numbers are increasing.

Time is running out fast: we need to stop talking and start doing. We need to learn how the most successful survivors in history – the Jews – have done it, and take the necessary lessons.

Ultimately, after we have established our own ghettoes, we will need to seize a significant territory, just like the Jews have done, and hold it at all costs, just as the Jews do.

The age old drive for blood and soil must once again become our primary focus – for without it, we will surely be exterminated.

White Man: Stand Your Ground

By Brandt Alan Pankey

"The dying out of racial instincts means the same thing to an individual as it does to a race, people, nation, State, Culture: unfruitfulness, lack of will-to-power, lack of ability to believe in or follow great aims, lack of inner discipline, desire for a life of ease and pleasure." -Francis Parker Yockey, Imperium

I know there are countless opinions on the struggles of the Aryan race, but there's one fundamental element of truth that's simple to understand and extremely disheartening: our "racial instincts" have been in a downward spiral for several decades now. We have gone from a once great nation to a disease and drug-permeated slum! We have gone from a nation where you could leave your doors unlocked at nighttime to a giant ghetto where you have to carry a gun to the grocery store!

We have gone from a nation of high, European standards to a lascivious cesspool riddled with immoral norms! We have gone from a nation of racial integrity to a Hollywood built "utopia" where miscegenation and "minority worship" is considered "cool." And, unfortunately, we will see our nation get worse and worse if things don't dramatically change!

I don't think all of this has taken place because we have gotten "weak"; I believe we have simply gotten too comfortable. Yes; I'm sure there are millions of European-Americans who are completely emasculated by the incessant attack on Whites by the big media companies, but on the other hand, there are also millions who would react to all of the social sickness in our country if they weren't so lazy and comfortable.

A lot of European-Americans instinctively feel the same as George Lincoln Rockwell did, the same as David Duke, and many others in the Aryan Cause; however, it is career suicide at this point in time to openly admit what they feel in their hearts and, sadly, most simply aren't prepared to sacrifice the "good life" for generations to come. In today's world, most consider materialistic gain and self-gratification as the sole purpose of human existence. It's all about being comfortable!

Of course, the famous last words of a dying civilization, "If it feels good, it must be good," have greatly helped with our regression. This mentality which came with the "Civil Rights" movement taught us to be selfish. It made us want all the sickness without the consequences!

The Civil Rights movement created a populace that perceives life as one long holiday; that all that really matters is individual happiness! If you want to be a homosexual who loves little boys, there's an advocate group that will fight for your "rights." If you want to have an abortion every few months, you have a "right to choose."

If you want four or five illegitimate kids, you have a right to your welfare check (if you're a non-White)! There's no reason for a family, a sense of duty, a culture or anything else that requires responsibility. And, basically, we owe most of this sickness to the Civil Rights movement and the "great" politicians who thought they were bettering America by pushing all of these different laws!

"This is the age in which falsehood is termed truth and truth persecuted as falsehood or mocked as insanity; in which the exponents of truth, the divinely inspired leaders, the real friends of their race and of all the living - the godlike men - are defeated, and their followers humbled and their memory slandered, while the masters of lies are hailed as saviors; the age in which every man and woman is in the wrong place, and the world dominated by inferior individuals, bastardized races, and vicious doctrines, all part and parcel of an order of inherent ugliness far worse than complete anarchy; the age that the Hindus have characterized from time immemorial as Kali Yuga - The Dark Age, the Era of Gloom." - Savitri Devi, The Lightning and the Sun

If there were any questions about this being true when Savitri Devi first published this book in 1958, the questions about the "Era of Gloom" have most definitely

been eradicated by the social sickness in 2005!! Nevertheless, we aren't dead yet, and as we've proven throughout history, as a race we can accomplish things other races can only dream of accomplishing.

However, we will not accomplish anything if we don't educate ourselves and strive to have a positive impact on the future of our people. And an important step towards accomplishing our extraordinary goals is recognizing that our selfish desires will eventually facilitate our demise. We all must realize that a certain level of personal sacrifice is necessary if we hope to make significant changes in the future of our blood!

Moreover, I don't feel we have the gift of time to continue these conflicts between different groups within the "movement." It's impossible to realize our destiny if we use most of our energy fighting each other. We all claim to want the same thing (a White West), so selfish desires and sectarian animosity only works as a setback to the Cause as a whole!

Regardless of what organization you belong to, or the God you believe in, you don't want to see the destruction of your people! You don't want to see the future generations of European-American children grow up in a society predicated on chaos! You don't want to see a society where European-American women aren't safe after dark! But, as stated before, this is a reality in today's world in many places, and it will only get worse if we don't wake up!

There are lots of bright lights and Hollywood dreams to keep all of us diverted from our responsibilities to our race, but we are rapidly approaching a point in our civilization where it's put up or shut up time! We must all realize that an individual's life isn't an end in itself. We are all just one step on an infinite road of greatness that stretches from the Ice Age and Leif Eriksson to Isaac Newton and putting a man on the moon. And it is our duty to ensure that this road of greatness continues to live and move forward forevermore!

The same blood runs through your veins that ran through the veins of Napoleon, Hitler, Alexander the Great, and many others, but that blood holds no significance if we don't stand up and protect it! That blood doesn't mean anything if we allow it to be trampled in the dust of egalitarian sickness and capitalist money worship! George Lincoln Rockwell believed that the only way we can accomplish our goals is through "a United White Race, supremely conscious of its natural destiny."

There are several people that believe a "United White Race" is almost impossible, but that is what our ultimate goal must be. Admittedly, the battle ahead of us seems unwinnable, but we have faced what seemed to be overwhelming odds before and won!

We have survived everything from ice ages and revolutions to fratricidal wars over controlled religion, and, undoubtedly, we can survive whatever the future has to offer! If our race unites and realizes its full potential, we can fight back the rising tide of decadence and persevere!

Regardless of how severe the situation, something in every age has "struck steel" in the hearts of Europeans and compelled them to react to the situation. I believe that "something" in this age will be the inevitable collapse of our social and monetary systems.

When you consider the intensity of illegal immigration, media propagated sickness, and miscegenation, there's no way possible America can sustain a healthy civilization over the coming decades. No "democracy" in history has passed the test of time without a collapse, and I don't anticipate America will be an exception. Therefore, I fully expect the time to come when "Americans" will be forced to deal with a dying country; I just hope the dying of our country doesn't completely destroy our race!

And there's always the question of whether America can be saved before it completely collapses,

but our social structure is at its limit, and our economic situation definitely won't get any better. We just have to hope all of the social sickness compels our people to react. But to save any system(s), we have to start at the bottom (each individual) and work our way to the top (the government). We must decide what we want for the future and react!

"For one cannot have it both ways: whoever is not for the everlasting forces of light and life, is against them. Unless one lives outside or above time, one either walks in the direction of the unavoidable evolution of history — i.e., toward decay and dissolution — or one stands against the current of centuries, in a bitter, apparently hopeless, but nevertheless beautiful struggle, one's eyes fixed upon those perennial ideals that can be fully translated into material reality only once, at the dawn of every successive cycle, by every successive new humanity. But it is true that the bold minority of men of action who fight, against time, for Golden Age ideals is bound to become, as time goes on, more and more ruthless in its effort to overcome an increasingly well-organized, increasingly elusive, and increasingly universal opposition. And for that very reason, it will become more and more difficult for the squeamish pacifists to follow it. In all probability, they will continue to prefer identifying themselves with the lying agents of the dark forces." -Savitri Devi, The Lightning and the Sun

With or without a "United White Race," with or without a race compelled to react, America will face a moment of truth. In George Washington's wildest dreams — or nightmares — he couldn't have ever dreamed of an America with abortion clinics in every city, but it happened.

Alexander Hamilton couldn't have ever dreamed of an America where Europeans are considered the root of all evil, but we live exactly like that today in America. I seriously doubt John Adams pictured a welfare state, but that is exactly what America is today.

So, nobody can say we haven't regressed over the years, and we will continue to regress until the moment of truth comes. It is my hope, however, that when the moment of truth comes for America, that our people can reach deep within their hearts and use the majestic power found in our genes to restore order to a dying country. Like it or not, the future won't be pretty if we don't regain our sense of purpose and honor; furthermore, there's absolutely no excuse for us to place the burden of the present on the children of the future!

We have a responsibility to secure a future for our blood, and it is time to accept that noble responsibility and take a stand!

THE LIGHTNING AND THE SUN
Savitri Devi

A classic philosophical work about the historical inevitability of cultural decay and rebirth, written by one of Adolf Hitler's most devoted admirers. Savitri Devi couches her arguments in metaphor, using "lightning" to refer to forces of destruction and "sun" to refer to building in accordance with Nature's eternal laws. Both are necessary, says Devi, since to build the pure and new one must first sweep away the rotting debris of the corrupt old order. Violence, per se, has no moral assignment; it's either worth its while or not, depending on what it aims for. For illustration, the author examines in detail the lives of three figures from history: Akhnaton, Genghis Khan, and Adolf Hitler. She argues that we are at the end of a cycle of history in which corruption and lies prevail over honor and truth, and that the time is ripe for the storm of violence that will precede the next golden age.

Heroes of Our Race: Part Three

Henry Ford

It is not often that one man alone survives the full might of Jewish pressure and violence – the astonishing story of the genius entrepreneur, mechanic, car-builder, and social reformer, Henry Ford, is one of the rare examples of Aryan leadership who took on International Judaism and survived by sheer intelligence and persistence.

In 1875, self-propelled vehicles were almost unheard of science fiction. So it was that when a twelve-year-old-boy, riding in a wagon with his father near their farm in Springwells Township (now in the city of Dearborn, Michigan), caught sight of a steam driven engine used to power a threshing machine, he was instantly in awe.

The engine stopped so that the horse might not be frightened, and the young boy jumped off the wagon to make a closer inspection. Going up to the driver, he poured out a flood of questions, and discovered that when the engine was wanted for its main purpose, the chain was disconnected from the propelling wheel and a belt put on to drive the threshing machinery.

The sight and mechanics of the device became an obsession: Back at home, with home-made tools, the young lad built model after model of the machine, each time trying to improve upon it. The bug had bitten the young Henry Ford, and from that moment on, his date with destiny had been made.

The "Born Mechanic"

Born in 1863 to William and Mary Ford, immigrants from County Cork, Ireland, Henry was later described by his mother as a "born mechanic" – something he proved when in 1879, at the tender age of 16, Henry left home for the nearby city of Detroit to work as an apprentice machinist with two large engineering houses in that city.

After three years of apprenticeship, Henry returned to Dearborn to work on the family farm. Here, his ability to service and operate a Westinghouse portable steam engine led him to being hired by the Westinghouse company to service their steam engines.

In 1891, Henry was given a job at Thomas Edison's Edison Illuminating Company. He and Edison eventually became personal friends, sharing political views which caused both some trouble. After his promotion to Chief Engineer in 1893, Henry had enough time and money to devote attention to his real passion: the internal combustion engine. Finally, in 1896 he finished his first real self-propelled vehicle, called the Quadricycle. This vehicle had wheels resembling those of a bicycle, a steering rod that looked like an invalid's bath chair, no body work at all, except for a seat. The car could go and at a great speed, but it was noisy, and at tides, members of the public regarded it with ridicule.

Even worse, when Henry tried to get someone to supply the capital to equip a factory to mass produce his car, people actually laughed at the vision he spelt out of thousands of horseless carriages speeding along city streets as that of a crackpot inventor gone mad. Finally, one investor agreed to back Henry – but on the condition that his name was not to be revealed, so fearful was he of ridicule from his own social circle. Henry was to prove all his detractors to be fools: within twenty years he had sold six million cars. The company he launched, the Detroit Automobile Company, initially went bankrupt because Ford continually tinkered with and improved the car design instead of selling it. Henry was finally forced out of the company by the investors in 1902, and the company was reorganized as Cadillac.

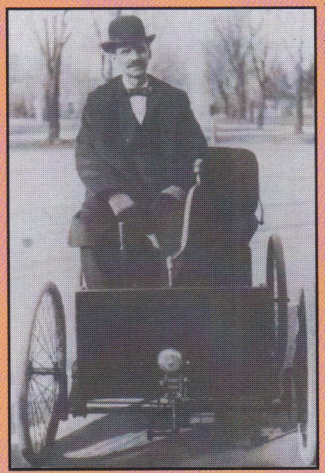
The Henry Ford Company and the Model T

Undeterred, Henry carried on. He raced his vehicles against those of other manufacturers to show the superiority of his designs. With his interest in race cars, he formed a second company, the Henry Ford Company. During this period, he personally drove his Quadricycle to victory in a race against Alexander Winton, a well-known driver and the heavy favorite in 1901.

The Henry Ford Company was started with $28,000 in capital, and incorporated the Ford Motor Company in 1903. In a newly-designed car, Ford drove an exhibition in which the car covered the distance of a mile on the ice of Lake St. Clair in 39.4 seconds, which was a new land speed record. In 1908, the Ford company released the Model T. From 1909 to 1913, he entered stripped-down Model Ts in races, finishing first (although later disqualified) in an "ocean-to-ocean" (across the USA) race in 1909, and setting a one-mile oval speed record at Detroit Fairgrounds in 1911.



Henry Ford and his first car, the Quadricycle, circa 1905.

By 1913, Henry had introduced the moving assembly belts into his plants, which enabled an enormous increase in production. This revolution allowed his factory to complete a vehicle every seven seconds. The results were fabulous: By 1918, half of all cars in America were Model Ts. That vehicle would only be discontinued in 1927, by which time some fifteen million vehicles had been produced. This was a record that would stand for the next 45 years, only being beaten by the Volkswagen Beetle in 1972.

By 1926, flagging sales of the Model T convinced Henry that a new model was necessary. The result was the highly successful Ford Model A, introduced in December 1927 and produced through 1931, with a total output of over four million automobiles. The company adopted an annual model change system similar to that in use by automakers today.

Ford's Damascus Revelation on his "Peace Ship"

Henry first wised up to the Jews in 1915, when he chartered a ship at his own expense and sailed to Europe with a group of supporters in an effort to end World War I through a negotiated peace.

On board ship, Henry told the well-known pacifist Madame Rozika Schwimmer: "I know who started this war — the German Jewish bankers." He later said to the Florence, Alabama correspondent of the New York Times that: "It was the Jews themselves who convinced me of the direct relationship between the international Jew and war. In fact, they went out of their way to convince me. On the peace ship were two very prominent Jews. We had not been at sea 200 miles before they began telling me of the power of the Jewish race, of they controlled the world through their control of gold, and that the Jew and no-one but the Jew could end the war. I was reluctant to believe it, but then they went into detail to convince me of means by which the Jews controlled the war, how they had the money, how they had cornered all the basic materials needed to fight the war and all that, and they talked so long and so well that they convinced me."

Slapping the pocket of his coat, Henry told Madame Schwimmer: "I have the evidence here — facts! I can't give them out because I haven't got them all. I'll have them soon!"

Henry waited and planned. In 1918, he bought a country newspaper called the Dearborn Independent. When he announced the re-launch of the newspaper, he justified his actions by saying: "I am very much interested in the future not only of my own country but of the whole world, and I have definite ideas and ideals that I believe are practical for the good of all and I intend giving them to the public without having them garbled, distorted, or misrepresented."

Ford did his planning well: he invested $10 million into the newspaper, and refused to accept advertisements, saying that he did not want the paper to be subjected to "commercial pressure." At that stage, only he and his most senior editorial staff knew to what he was referring.

The Dearborn Independent Launches its Campaign

Suddenly on May 22, 1920, the Dearborn Independent launched its campaign upon an unsuspecting public. The headline on the front page was a blunt and concise summation of the editorial's thesis: "The International Jew: The World's Problem."

The first paragraph began: "There is a race, apart of humanity which has never yet been received as a welcome part." This people, the article continued, has ever been fouling the earth and plotting to dominate it. In order to eventually rule the Gentiles, the Jews have long been conspiring to them an "international super-capitalist government" This racial problem, the Dearborn Independent said, was the "prime" question confronting all society.

The following ninety-one articles covered a wide field of topics related to the International Jew. Ranging from Jews in a World Government to Jews in American finance, in Communism, theater, movies, baseball, bootlegging, and song writing, the articles had titles such as "The Jewish Associates of Benedict Arnold," "The Gentle Art of Changing Jewish Names," "What Jews Attempted When Then They Had Power," "The All-Jewish Mark on Red Russia," and "Taft Once Tried to Resist the Jews—and Failed."

In subsequent articles, Henry accused the Jews of causing a decline in American culture, values, products, entertainment, and of being the instigators of World War I. Serious charges were leveled against several well-known Jews. Bernard M. Baruch was called the "pro-consul of Judah in America," a "Jew of Super-Power" and "the most powerful man" during the First World War.

Jewish Violence, Boycott and Financial Pressure All Fail

The International Jew: The World's Problem

"Among the distinguishing mental and moral traits of the Jews may be mentioned: distaste for hard or violent physical labor; a strong family sense and philoprogenitiveness; a marked religious instinct; the courage of the prophet and martyr rather than of the pioneer and soldier; remarkable power to survive in adverse environments, combined with great ability to retain racial solidarity; capacity for exploitation, both individual and social; shrewdness and astuteness in speculation and money matters generally; an Oriental love of display and a full appreciation of the power and pleasure of social position; a very high average of intellectual ability."
—The New International Encyclopedia.

THE Jew is again being singled out for critical attention throughout the world. His emergence in the financial, political and social spheres has been so complete and spectacular since the war that his place, power and purpose in the world are being given a new scrutiny, much of it unfriendly. Persecution is not a new experience to the Jew, but intensive scrutiny of his nature and super-nationalic ancient prophecies to the effect that the Jew will return to his own land and from that center rule the world, though not until he has undergone an assault by the united nations of mankind.

The single description which will include a larger percentage of Jews than members of any other race is this: he is in business. It actually pass a law to censor the Dearborn Independent and forbid its sale in the streets. Sales were so reduced by opposition that Henry eventually had to obtain a court injunction to overturn the Jews' reversal of democracy.

In several other cities, gangs of Jew thugs set up a systematic program of brutally and violently assaulting newspaper salesmen who dared sell the Dearborn Independent.

Jewish pressure saw some public libraries barring the Dearborn Independent from their collections and a resolution of protest was introduced in Congress. Representatives of all national Jewish organizations and religious bodies issued a common declaration denouncing Henry.

An article in the newspaper on 19 February 1921, entitled "Jewish Supremacy in Motion Picture World" revealed that the Fox Film Corporation and the Fox circuit of theaters "are under control of another Hungarian Jew who is known to the American public as William Fox. His original name is said to have been Fuchs."

The Jew Fox then started showing footage of Model T accidents in his newsreels, all as part of a concerted campaign to drive the Ford Motor Company out of business. Soon most Jew firms and individual Jews boycotted Ford products, and Gentile firms who did business with Jewish concerns and were dependent on their good will followed suit to please their best customers.

The dip in orders for Ford cars was most severe in the eastern metropolitan centers of the country and, within a few months, Ford competitors began to gain the edge. Officials high in the company later agreed that during the run of the Dearborn Independent, the company lost business that was never regained. It was only the demands of the post World War II market that the Jew boycott was not strong enough to cripple the Ford industry permanently.

Henry's clash with the Jewish financiers went beyond revealing their religious and racial affiliations in the Dearborn Independent. By 1921, the bankers had conspired to bring down the Ford Motor Company for once and for all, when false rumors were spread that the Jew boycott had brought the company to its knees and that Wall Street bankers were about to foreclose on Henry.

Jews Launch Vicious Campaign Against Ford

In 1924, David Meckler published an exposé of Ford in Yiddish called The Truth About Henry Ford, which included on its cover a hooded Ku Klux Klansman with his arm casually and familiarly draped over Henry Ford's shoulder, suggesting a friendly relationship between two men sharing common anti-Semitic, nativist, and racist beliefs.

"Henry Ford has reached his limit" announced the Dow-Jones Financial Ticker service. :It is beyond the powers of any one man to raise money and carry forward single-handed the manifold enterprises in which he has started."

Many newspapers dramatized the situation: In bright red ink, the Denver Post announced that "Ford Battles Wall Street to Keep Control of Property." The Jews were using their financial clout – which Henry had correctly pointed out in the Dearborn Independent – to try and strangle the company to death.

But this was a man of different metal: instead of buckling, as other lesser men might have, he fought back. Unable to raise capital to keep the production lines going, he shut down Ford operations to skeleton staff for several months, allowing all spares and parts to be used up in the manufacture of cars. When he returned to full staff compliment, he was unburdened of the heavy price of carrying large amounts of stock places on any company, and immediately shipped large quantities of vehicles to the Ford dealers, who, as usual, had to pay for their stock upfront.

In this way, Henry was able to convert his stock on hand into real cash, and was able to escape the worst of the Jewish financial boycott. By April, he had paid all his debts in full, and soon the story went out that he had "outwitted the bankers." Even hostile newspapers admitted his "victory over the bankers" and Ford cars sold at a record-breaking rate: in the eyes of the average American he had become a folk hero.

'The Most Popular Man in America' – 1924

In 1924, when popular rumor had it that he would stand for president, he was universally hailed as the most popular man in America. He declined the nomination, although if he had taken it, he would surely have won.

The reason for his universal popularity lay primarily in his victory over the Jew bankers, and in his revolutionary social reforms. He was looked upon as the model employer. His, by then, enormous army of employees – over 40,000 – were paid the highest wage in America.

On January 5, 1914, Henry announced his "five-dollar a day" program. The program called for a reduction in length of the workday from 9 to 8 hours and a raise in minimum daily pay from $2.34 to $5 for qualifying workers. He labeled the increased compensation as profit sharing rather than wages.

In 1926, Henry instituted the five-day, forty-hour workweek, effectively inventing the modern weekend. In granting workers an extra day off, Ford insured leisure time for the working class. The "short week," as Ford called it in a contemporary interview, was required so that the country could "absorb its production and stay prosperous."

His own humble origins never blinded him to the realities of the working class, despite his own stupendous wealth. Henry said that the working man wants big wages, short hours, and a reasonable assurance of permanent employment.

These things he gave to his workers, and added such then unheard of fundamentals as care in sickness (he built his own Ford Hospital, in which workers were treated until better, no matter what the duration, at no cost and still paid full wages), and provided rewards to workers who came up with ideas for improvement. More than once he purchased and brought within his organization a concern that was losing money. Instead of beginning the new regime, as some would do, by economizing in wages, Henry first doubled every worker's wage straight away. His argument was that the generous treatment of the working class was the best investment an employer could make.

His ability to view all things in a micro and macro perspective allowed Henry to maximize all parts of his company. He made thousands of dollars from the factory's floor sweepings, the by-products of his coal treatment used into the blast furnaces and boilers often returned more money that the coal originally cost, and the wood off cuts – grown on trees in his own artificially created plantations – were gathered up for use as wood pulp in the manufacture of cardboard.

Famously, he even used the packing crates in which components came for parts of the cars, specifying to suppliers what size the crates should be for this very purpose.

Henry was also an early promoter of aviation, building the Dearborn Inn as the first airport hotel. He heavily sponsored the Stout Metal Airplane Company, which developed the Ford Tri-Motor, an early airliner.

'The International Jew' is Republished Around the World

In 1921, Henry and his friend (and fellow anti-Semite) Thomas Edison were on their way to inspect the Muscle Shoals power plant when an Alabama reporter got through the crowd to ask him how long his anti-Semitic articles would continue.

Henry replied that his "course of instruction on the Jews would last five years." He was true to his word: he kept the Dearborn Independent running – at a personal cost to himself of millions of dollars – for a further six years, only ceasing publication in 1927.

Despite all of the attempts to silence Henry's campaign, his ideas spread quickly throughout the world. He turned the Dearborn Independent from a small unknown local paper into a huge circulation into a notorious, mass- circulated, anti-Semitic propaganda sheet: From 1919 to 1927 the paper's nationwide circulation exceeded a quarter of a million, and from 1923 to 1927 it reached the half-million mark.

Reprints of the articles that appeared in the Independent were published in a four-volume set (1920—1922) that gained a considerable circulation all over the world (it was eventually translated into 16 languages), called The International Jew.

Ford's Influence on Adolf Hitler

Henry's activities caught the attention of Adolf Hitler himself, then still a struggling Bavarian politician. Baldur von Schirach, leader of the Hitler Youth. Said at the postwar Nuremburg Trials that he had become an anti-Semite at the age of seventeen after reading The International Jew. "You have no idea what a great influence this book had on the thinking of German youth," Von Schirach said.

Henry also became the only American to be mentioned by name in Hitler's Mein Kampf. Hitler admiration for the auto magnate, the New York Times reported, was made obvious by the large picture of Henry on the wall beside Hitler's desk in the Brown House.

When news of the Jewish boycotts reached the Nazis, Hitler declared that "the struggle of international Jewish finance against Ford has only strengthened the sympathies of the National Socialist Party for Ford and has given the broadest circulation to his book, The International Jew."

And in 1923, when Hitler learned that people wanted to nominate Henry for President, he said, according to the Chicago Tribune, "I wish that I could send some of my shock troops to Chicago and other big American cities to help in the elections. We look to Heinrich Ford as the leader of the growing Fascist

THE AUSCHWITZ GAS CHAMBER: THE END OF A LEGEND

The alleged extermination of six million Jews by National Socialist Germany has at its core the story of the 'gas chambers' at Auschwitz. In these chambers, we are told, untold millions of Jews and others were murdered. Yet, if one thinks about the issue logically for just one second, some serious gaps emerge in the story. Andrew Keeley spent some time digging around the story, and here is his report on the great gas chamber hoax of Auschwitz.

The first thing that strikes one when you enter the Auschwitz camp as a tourist today, is the huge chimney which leers up to your left as you walk in the camp gate. It is so huge and in your face, that you can't miss it. Your 'guide' – sometimes you are lucky enough to have a genuine survivor, somehow still dressed in his striped prisoner clothes, advising you where the camp orchestra stood as they played music for the prisoners coming back to the camp after a day's work somewhere.

Yet when one walks into the camp, one is asked, almost in a religious manner, to suspend all logic and scientific thought, and just believe. The logic of it all vanishes out the window – why, for example, if they were killing people en masse here, did they have prisoners "doing a day's work" and yet still more prisoners playing musical instruments to accompany those coming back from a day's work?

Above: A frontal view of Crematorium 1, at Auschwitz 1 camp. This photograph shows how the Auschwitz crematorium and gas chamber (underground) is presented to the modern visitor to Auschwitz.

But more is yet to come. A visit to the gas chamber is an obligatory stop on the camp tour. It looks menacing. You have to enter it through a cut away in its earthen bank, and next thing, you are in a room in which a bouquet of flowers lays in permanent memory to those supposedly killed.

Yet there is something wrong here as well: the door at the far end of the 'gas chamber' is a flimsy wood construction, with a big glass panel. Surely, if thousands of people were being gassed in here, they would have broken that little door down quicker than you could say yarmulke. And then, when you walk around a bit, you notice other strange things: the roof contains 'vents' into which the Zyklon-B gas pellets were poured, you are told. But these vents look suspiciously un-airtight – and indeed they are just flimsy, open-ended wooden boxes with lift off lids. If you threw some gas pellets down there, the resultant fumes would certainly kill the 'operator' as well.

Then you go outside: and you see that the 'gas chamber' is directly next to the camp administration building, and the camp hospital. And when I say directly next to these buildings, I mean just that. No more than a few dozen feet at most. Gas leaking out the flimsy 'vents' on top of the 'gas chamber' would most certainly reach both the administration staff and the hospital, several times a day, if we are to believe the 'mass gassing' story. Surely something is not quite right.

And then, as you stroll around the gas chamber, the biggest shock of all awaits you: the huge chimney which dominates the scene, is not even connected to the 'gas chamber' – it stands very clearly about ten feet away from the building itself. In fact, it is connected to nothing at all. It is a dummy chimney. In spite of these clear anomalies, this structure has been presented to visitors for decades as a real 'gas chamber' in which millions were killed. Even today, when you visit, the guides will tell you this, and the mass media regularly carry pictures or stories of the 'gas chamber.' Yet it is openly acknowledged –but steadfastly ignored – by the camp museum administrators, that this gas chamber is a post war construction.

AUSCHWITZ MUSEUM OFFICIALLY ADMITS GAS CHAMBER RECONSTRUCTION

The official Web site of the Auschwitz Museum has bowed down before Holocaust Revisionists and has officially admitted that the gas chamber and Crematorium 1, which is shown to visitors as evidence of the 'mass extermination of the Jews,' was built after the war. This dramatic admission can be found on the Auschwitz museum's Web page, where the following passage has now been inserted: "After the war, the Museum carried out a partial reconstruction. The chimney and two incinerators were rebuilt using original components, as were several of the openings in the gas chamber roof."

ORIGINAL ARCHITECT'S PLANS SHOW NO GAS CHAMBERS

The original German architectural building plans for Auschwitz have survived, and are on display at the camp museum to this day. There are no gas chambers on these original plans - and given the specialist construction which would be required to build chambers capable of killing thousands of people at a time (as is claimed) it seems extremely unlikely that the plans in question would not have shown these structures.

It is claimed that the rooms marked as mortuaries (in German, "Leichenkellers") on the building plans were used as gas chambers — a claim which is highly dubious, given the technical demands which an airtight chamber being used for mass gassings, would require.

FORENSIC INVESTIGATION OF "GAS CHAMBER" RUINS REVEALS NO EVIDENCE OF GASSINGS

Although the Crematorium 1 has now been accepted by all as having been built after the war, there are in the Auschwitz-Birkenau camp the remains of no less than four other crematoria, all of which are alleged to either have had gas chambers attached to them in an underground facility, or have had the capacity for such

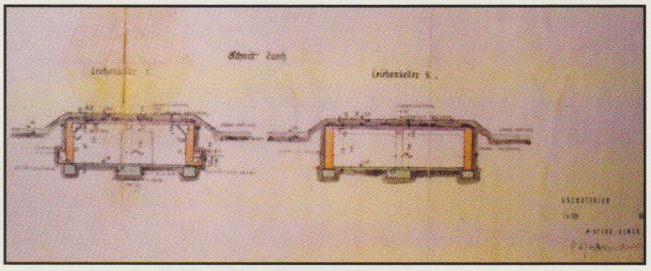
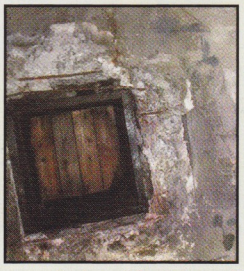
Above: A photograph of the alleged gas chamber at Auschwitz 1 which is shown to visitors today. Entrance is gained through the front (non-airtight) door on the picture on page 14, and the room has another ordinary door at the top left in the picture above. If this room had been used to mass gas thousands of people, the doors would have been smashed out in an instant by the victims, especially if they were, as the story goes, packed into such facilities thousands or hundreds at a time.



Above: The original German architectural building plans for Crematorium 2 at the Auschwitz-Birkenau camp, on public display in the camp museum today. According to this original plan, there is no gas chamber. It is claimed that the underground structures, marked very clearly as mortuaries ("Leichenkellers") were used as gas chambers — something which would technically be almost impossible, given the extremely high airtight specifications which would be necessary at gas chamber executions.



Above: These pictures are of two of the "Zyklon-B" induction tubes in the roof of the alleged gas chamber shown to modern visitors to Auschwitz. The flimsy 'lift-off' wooden lid nature of the 'induction tubes' and the obvious haste of the 'hole' in the ceiling into which the 'tubes' have been placed, make a mockery of the camp museum's claim that the gas chamber was "reconstructed with original material."

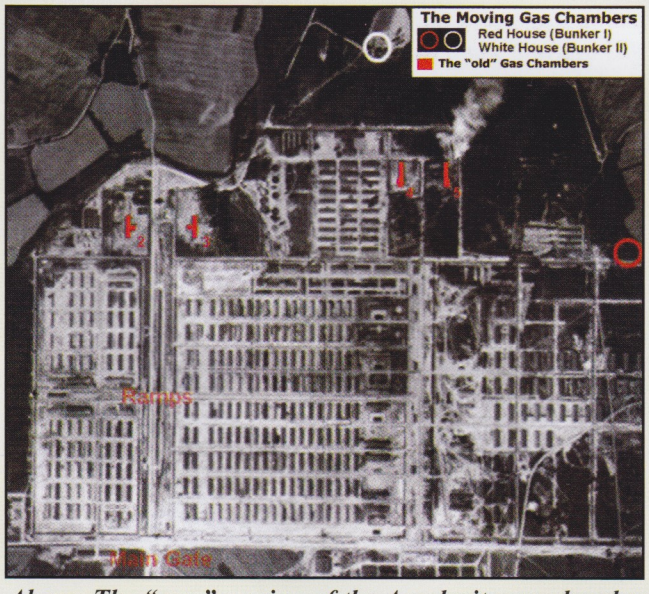
gas chambers. As cyanide gas leaves very long lasting traces in walls and plaster, the obvious step for anyone wishing to conclusively prove the use of Zyklon-B as a mass killing agent in the ruins of the alleged gas chambers at Auschwitz, would be to take forensic samples from these sites and analyze them for traces of the poison gas. Surprisingly, samples were never taken from these sites to try and prove that mass gassing took place — and it was up to the revisionist historians, who doubted the mass gassing story, to take the first samples and analyze them. These samples were taken by Fred Leuchter, an acknowledged American expert who designed and built many of the late 20th century American judicial execution methods, and whose work is widely available on the Internet.

In February 1988, Leuchter traveled to Auschwitz, Poland, and assessed the likelihood that the building remains there could have functioned as homicidal gas chambers. He took forty samples of the fabric of those structures, for forensic and chemical analysis by reputable American laboratories. These laboratories found no significant residues of hydrogen-cyanide compounds except in one structure, which was commonly agreed to have been the building in which the slave laborers' clothing was fumigated with Zyklon-B. Here there were massive quantities of the poison residue still impregnating the brickwork. It has since been alleged that Leuchter's samples were invalid because they were ground up with brick and plaster which had not been exposed to Zyklon-B. This allegation is without foundation, as the test results, undertaken by an independent laboratory in the USA that had not been told the samples' origin, found the differentiation in traces of cyanide gas to be constant from site to site. Thus, even if non-contaminated material had been mixed in with the original, the differences between the area where delousing had taken place and where alleged mass killings had taken place, were still identical, despite all the samples having been subjected to the same mixing process.



Above: The "new" version of the Auschwitz gas chamber story, as announced by establishment historian and editor of Der Spiegel, Fritjof Meyer, in 2002, is that the gassings did not take place in the crematoria mortuaries, but rather in outbuildings which were outside the main camp itself.

INDEPENDENT FORENSIC RESEARCH CONFIRMS LEUCHTER REPORT

Disturbed by the Leuchter Report, the director of the Auschwitz museum and archives, Franciszek Piper, secretly commissioned a new Polish forensic laboratory report on the camp to double check Leuchter's results. This independent Polish government investigation, which the Auschwitz museum authorities have yet to release, although it is dated 24 September 1990, shows that while there are substantial concentrations (between 9 and 147 micrograms per 100g) of cyanide residues in ten samples taken from the walls of the rooms and chambers where cyanide gas was used for disinfecting the slave-laborers' clothing, there are none whatever in ten samples taken from rooms identified in countless war crimes trials as the lethal gas chambers also using this Zyklon B (hydrogen cyanide) gas, apart from a " vanishingly small" trace in one column in Birkenau, compatible with routine disinfectant operations. Forensic tests on human hair samples were also negative.

THE AUSCHWITZ GAS CHAMBER CHANGES LOCATION

Confronted with the above mentioned contradictions and impossibilities, the 'gas chambers' at Auschwitz story has recently been changed once again. Proponents of the 'gas chamber' now, incredibly, claim that the gassings did not take place in the mortuary cellars at all, but rather in two outbuildings, situated outside the camp itself.

Above: The remains of the "Red House" and "White House" bunkers, as they are today. These were the sites now claimed to have been the scene of mass gassings, according to the latest establishment version of the Auschwitz camp. The reader will note the convenience of the site: leveled to the ground, and thus not susceptible to the forensic examinations that have conclusively disproved the "mortuary gas chamber" allegations of earlier.

This astonishing 'about face' was first made by the 34-year veteran managing editor of the establishment German magazine Der Spiegel, Fritjof Meyer. Writing in the very Politically Correct journal OstEuropa (president of the OstEuropa publishing house is the former German Parliamentary Speaker, Dr. Rita Süssmuth) in May 2002, Meyer said that new research made it clear that there had indeed been no gassings in the mortuaries of the crematoria - as claimed by "eyewitnesses" and all the forced "confessions" obtained from SS-men, but had rather taken place in what has become known as "Bunker 1" and "Bunker 2" which were situated outside the camp.

This concession was forced by revisionist investigations that proved that the mortuaries could not have been used as gas chambers. Despite the official revision in the story, in establishment circles, the 'gas chamber' in the mortuary story is still shown to visitors to the Auschwitz camp and is widely disseminated in the mass media. As the outbuildings where the gassings are now supposed to have taken place were quite small, Meyer, writing in OstEuropa, was also forced to reduce the number of victims of the gas chamber. Citing official sources, Meyer said that only some 356,000 people were gassed there — substantially down from the millions as claimed earlier.

Most conveniently, both the outbuildings, which Meyer and others now claim to have been the 'real' gas chambers, have been leveled to the ground. Once again, like the 'mortuary gas chamber story,' the actual site of the alleged gas chamber simply does not exist any more.

THE ORIGIN OF THE "SHOWER" GAS CHAMBER

The story of the "shower" gas chambers, at Auschwitz in particular, is derived from the fact that there were indeed mass shower facilities at the camp. Ironically, the Germans took special care to ensure that all camp inmates were regularly bathed to try and prevent the spread of disease, which would have severely impacted the purpose of the camp, namely as a labor resource for the industry around the camp.

Above: A photograph, taken by the Germans, and reproduced in the pro-Extermination thesis book, AUSCHWITZ: Technique and Operation of the Gas Chambers by Jean-Claude Pressac, 1989, which shows the extent of the Auschwitz shower rooms, complete with camp inmates just having taken a shower. It was from these facilities that the story of "gas chambers in shower rooms" originated, ironic because the showers still remain on display at the camp today, even though it is no longer claimed that they were used as gas chambers. The caption in Pressac's book reads: "A group of prisoners, carrying their shoes, has just showered and is going into the "Trockenraum. R. Seite / drying room, clean side." Some of the 50 showers are visible and the installation corresponds to that shown [PMO neg. no. 20995/477].

DELOUSING CHAMBERS FOR CLOTHING USED ZYKLON-B IN ALL CAMPS

What did exist — at all the camps — were small delousing chambers — air tight rooms — usually no larger than large cupboards - in which clothes were regularly deloused with the Zyklon-B chemical (which was - and still is to this day - sold under that brand name as an insecticide).

These delousing chambers were used in all the Nazi camps — including those in Germany itself, with the result that Zyklon-B was distributed to all camps, in Poland and in Germany alike. All Nazi documentation relating to gas and gassing equipment refers specifically to this use of the poison gas, and nowhere is reference made to the killing of people in the camps with this insecticide.

The Germans were aware that lice infestations meant the outbreak of the deadly disease typhus, and that if that disease took hold, it could easily kill their precious labor force. They therefore took great precautions to prevent the outbreak of typhus, which included regular disinfestations of the camp barracks, and special disinfestation rooms, in which the clothing of all inmates was passed to kill lice.

ZYKLON-B: INSECTICIDE USED AT ALL CAMPS

Surviving bills of lading for Zyklon-B, which are available for public inspection at the National Archives in the United States, show very clearly that Zyklon-B was shipped to all camps, and not just to the alleged gas chamber camps. The bills of lading in the U.S. National Archives run from 16 February to 31 May 1944 and reveal that the cases of cyanide crystals (Zyklon) are numbered in sequence (Nos. 50,053 to 50,210), each shipment consisted of thirteen cases, totaling 195 kg; and identical shipments — six each — went to Auschwitz and Oranienburg concentration camps. Oranienburg is situated in Germany itself, and not even the wildest Holocaust exaggeration has ever claimed that there was a homicidal gas chamber at Oranienburg camp. The existence of proof of shipping of Zyklon-B to be used as a delousing agent to Oranienburg, is conclusive evidence of the real purpose for which that chemical was actually used for in the camps.

THE ORIGIN OF THE 'GAS CHAMBER' STORY

Auschwitz did indeed have 'gas chambers' which used Zyklon-B, complete with airtight doors and peepholes – but, they were used exclusively for disinfecting clothes. The clothing gas chambers were kept for the clothes of new arrivals, which were the most likely to be infected with lice. This gas chamber was in the section of the camp called "Kanada I."

The parallels between the real clothing delousing station and the alleged "human gas chambers" are so close that it is clear the homicidal gas chamber story was developed from the real clothing delousing system.

AUSCHWITZ'S REAL PURPOSE - A MASSIVE LABOR CAMP

If there is no physical evidence of gas chambers having been operational at Auschwitz, the question can be rightly asked then what was the purpose of the camp in the first place. The answer to this is startlingly obvious if the site is visited with an unbiased eye: the Auschwitz area was one of the industrial concentration areas for the Third Reich, housing factories from almost all major industries which supported the Reich's war effort.

The Buna rubber factory was in Auschwitz, was an IG-Farben factory, amongst dozens of others, manufacturing everything from clothing through to medical supplies. Jews — and others — were sent to Auschwitz to work as forced labor.

USE OF INMATES AS LABOR EXPLAINS TATTOOING

The use of inmates at Auschwitz as labor also explains why the Nazis would have found it necessary to tattoo identification numbers on prisoners' arms - for if it was their intention to gas all Jews sent to Auschwitz, it would have made no sense to go through the trouble and expense of identifying and tattooing them first.

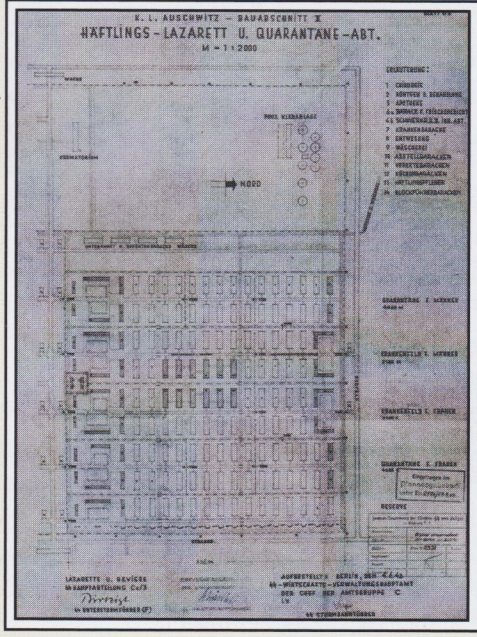
As the Soviet army advanced westward, the Nazis closed down the Auschwitz camp and forced all able bodied inmates to evacuate westward with them - once again contradicting the mass murder theory. If the Nazis had indeed wanted to kill all the inmates of Auschwitz, there would have been no logical reason to take Jews with them back into the Reich. The obvious intention in evacuating all able bodied inmates was to keep using them as labor at other locations, once again underlining the real purpose of the Auschwitz complex.

THE PHYSICAL IMPOSSIBILITY AND LIES AROUND THE "GAS CHAMBERS"

In review, then, the following conclusions can be drawn:

1. The 'gas chamber' on display at Auschwitz today is a post war fabrication, as admitted to by the camp museum. This 'gas chamber' has a number of serious structural errors, including glass windows, is not airtight, and the 'chimney' is not connected to any building. The camp museum now claims that the chimney is "symbolic" and was also built after the war.
2. In the absence of any other evidence, it is now claimed that the gassings did not take place in the crematoria mortuaries – which did exist – but rather in two small outbuildings, which, conveniently, have been razed to the ground.
3. The new "moving gas chamber" story has also reduced the number of "gassing victims" to around 350,000 – down from the original "four million" which was contained in the forced 'confession' the Soviet extracted from the former camp commander, Rudolf Hoess.
4. The story about "showers" and "gas chambers with peepholes" is an invention based on the fact that there were genuine showers and genuine delousing chambers at Auschwitz. Malicious liars have simply transformed these installations into alleged homicidal "gas chambers."
5. The sheer existence of such camp installations as a hospital for inmates, showers for inmates, and clothes cleaning facilities, are all in direct contradiction to the assertion that the camp was set up to murder those very same inmates. Why provide them with showers and clean their clothes if they are going to be gassed?

The fable of the Auschwitz gas chamber is at an end. Now comes the time to punish those evil people who invented this wicked lie and slandered and extorted the entire German nation.



Auschwitz Prisoner Hospital

Architect's plans for a prisoner hospital at Auschwitz, which clearly states that it is a quarantine and hospital, built only a few hundred yards from the alleged 'gas chambers.' It is, of course, absurd to claim that Auschwitz had as its purpose the 'extermination' of Jews, while at the same time having a hospital to treat those same prisoners -- all in the identical location. Furthermore, the plans come from the SS Economic Administration Head Office in Berlin, and are thus representative of officially sanctioned policy.

"On Being Light" -- Jim Ring Discusses Humor as a Propaganda Tool in the White Nationalist Arsenal

In issue #21 of Resistance magazine, there is an interview with a racialist stand-up comic dealing with the subject of humor and light-heartedness. Since that interview, the comic has been involved in some unpleasant experiences with local politics in his area and it appears he may not have been able to "keep his chin up." His great sense of humor may have failed him in this instance.

The lesson here is that a sense of humor is no failsafe against the various tragedies that befall active racialists at times; but that humor and a positive outlook can and does help in these dark times and situations we find ourselves in. It started me thinking about humor and light-heartedness within our struggle and its effect on community building.

We live in dangerous times. Things are unnatural and don't appear as if they'll improve anytime soon. It's hard to keep our own "chins up" at times. The world as it is today is not "our world"; it belongs to our enemies at present. We look at our struggle with grim determination and grit our teeth and do what we can to further our Cause to bring about the world we want.

It's not the type of situation that encourages a smiling, happy-go-lucky, zippity-do-da outlook on our daily lives or our outlook into the immediate future. Having said that, it still behooves us to work hard at projecting a more positive attitude; one of good spirits and a sense of humor. Why? Because we are an individual personification of the struggle we represent. Whatever image we project is the image that those who come into contact with us will perceive our whole struggle to be.

If we put forth a negative attitude; if we are always disagreeable; if we never express anything positive and we are known to be a supporter or activist for the struggle, what do you think people who know you will think of the struggle as a whole? Yep! You'll just prove to them that the Jewish media is correct; these people are base, mean-spirited, hateful misfits.

Compare the hate-filled, grimacing, threatening "representatives" of the White race you've seen on the Jewish TV talk shows and juxtapose that image with representatives of the National Alliance or a David Duke for instance. What images best represents our side? Now you know why the negative image portrayed by these others are the images of choice for the Jewish talk show hosts. They don't have to make it up as there are those who provide them with the stereotype they want to project to the public.

It's not easy to show a sunny side in such a dark world. But think about it; doesn't being "dark" show that some of our very essence is being absorbed into this decaying world? Sure they're kicking and fighting all the way in resistance, but they're being absorbed nonetheless.

Compare that to the "sunny" person; the person who is of good humor and pleasant disposition. But how could a person who is a racialist, struggling against all odds in an unnatural world gone insane show a "sunny" side? From where could this "sun" or "light" come from?

It comes from confidence and faith; from knowing that our mission represents truth. And these attributes are not measured by numbers, but by the quality of the adherents it has and thus the ability of these people to "shine" in the midst of a decaying world.

They "shine" with confidence in the ultimate victory of their Cause and can smile because they know or have faith in its historical inevitability. Thus, even in these dark times they will always have a positive outlook and a genuine sense of good humor. These people are true symbols of the future; an example of living "in time," yet "above time" as the great philosopher Savitri Devi would put it. They have taken hold of her message that all Nature is cyclical; the eternal wheel continues to turn and our time approaches as surely as the decay continues to rot and darken our world.

The dance the god Shiva dances is not just one of destruction, but at the same time one of rebirth from the destruction as our Cause awaits to build a new world thus ushering in the next time-cycle...and the wheel continues its turn. The adherents of light thusly are not absorbed but shine hope and determination; not despondency and desperation.

Aryan Technology: Genetics – Cracking the code of life itself

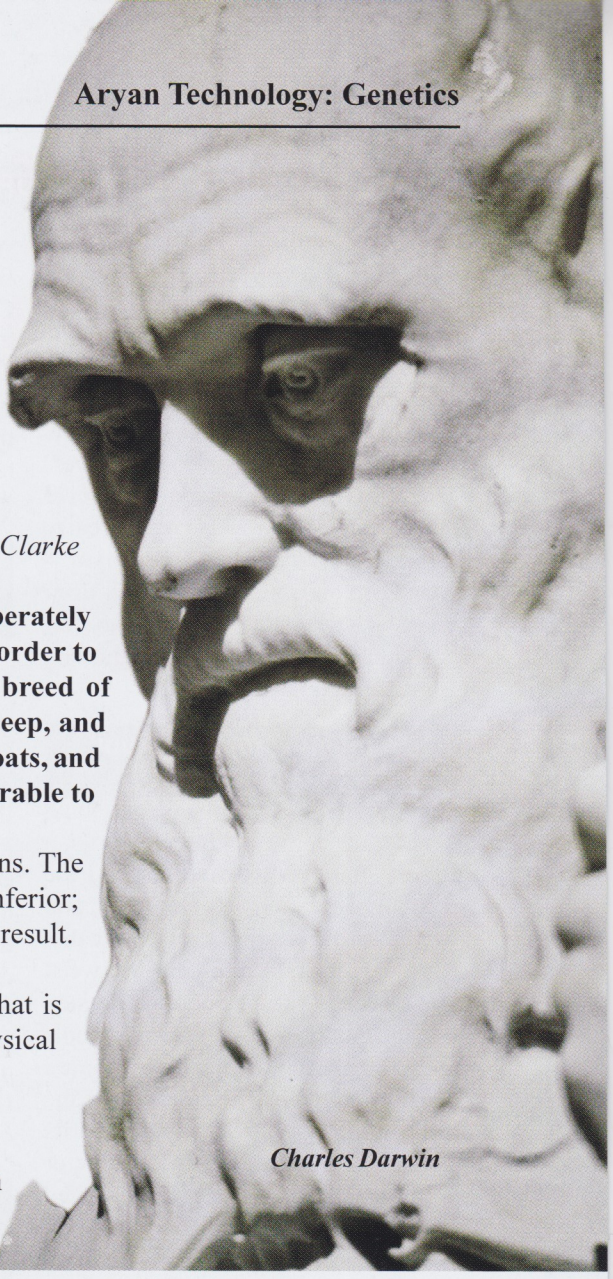
By John Clarke



Charles Darwin

Many thousands of years ago, primitive humans began deliberately pairing male and female of their domesticated animals in order to custom-design the next generation of creatures. Every breed of domesticated dog today was created this way, as were our cattle, sheep, and even horses. This success was reproduced with plants such as wheat, oats, and peas, in order to favor certain attributes above others that were desirable to people.

Greek philosophers realized that the same laws governed humans. The ancient Spartans deliberately killed their newborn babies that were inferior; improving the physical and mental characteristics of their people as a result. Today we call this Eugenics – the deliberate improving of the race.

Time and experience taught mankind some general rules of what is today known as "genetics," though without any understanding of a physical basis for those rules.

PIONEERS

Two names in history stand out as pioneers in placing genetics on a scientific footing: Gregor Mendel and Charles Darwin. They pioneered what is known as "classical genetics," which predates genetics based on molecular biology. In 1859 Darwin published his Origin Of Species, followed in 1865 by Gregor Mendel's Experiments on Plant Hybridization. These two scientists never met and never got to know of one another's research.

While Mendel deduced his theory from practical experiments by crossbreeding different hybrids of pea plants, Darwin did so by observing nature and cataloguing many thousands of plants, animals, insects, and birds. Darwin also made significant contributions in the field of geology. It was not until 1903 that the hereditary units were proved to be chromosomes, found within the nuclei of plant and animal cells.

The Double Helix Discovered - 1953

Edmund Hilary climbed Mount Everest in 1953, a great achievement. But another achievement that same year would have far greater consequences for humanity - the discovery of the double-helix structure of chromosomes by James Watson and Francis Crick, (assisted by Rosalind Franklin). Researchers found that chromosomes are made up of tens of thousands of genes, each of which is built from combinations of only four bases, and each base is an exact molecular group of atoms. Genes encode the information needed to synthesize the amino acid sequences, which are the building blocks of proteins, which to a large extent determine the physical characteristics of the plant or animal.

It now became possible to see the actual physical cause of certain genetic diseases and the physical mechanism for various mechanisms of evolution. In 1977, DNA of a bacteriophage (?X174) was completely sequenced. This was the first time that a unit of "life" could be perfectly represented, atom by atom. The human

73% Non-White Mississippi City Declares Crime Emergency

The Negro mayor of Jackson, Mississippi, has declared an emergency in his 73% non-White city. The emergency would, he said, last for at least 30 days, until "the community tells me they feel they are safe and secure." The measures include a unilateral curfew – which is also technically illegal without council approval – which prohibits people under 18 from being outside their homes without adult oversight after 8 pm on weeknights and 10 pm on weekends.

Hmong Invaders Disrupt Arkansas Town

The town of Gentry, Arkansas is facing a crisis as hundreds of Southeast Asian Hmong immigrants have invaded the predominantly White community, and have set the scene for a racial clash that has city leaders scrambling. Between November and January, police arrested 14 students of Gentry Public Schools following what authorities labeled "racially motivated" fights. All of the clashes involved Hmong youths squaring off against either Hispanic or White peers. The conflicts involved multiple students, sent a child to the hospital, and got two Hmong and two Hispanic teens expelled from school. Between 1990 and 2004, Gentry's population of minority-group members grew from 3 percent to 12 percent, while the town grew by 50 percent to 2,577 people. Minority-group members now account for 23 percent of Gentry's students, up from 5 percent 12 years ago.

Field Commanders tell Pentagon Iraq war 'is lost'

Military commanders in the field in Iraq have admitted in private reports to the Pentagon the war "is lost" and that the U.S. Military is unable to stem the mounting violence killing 1,000 Iraqi civilians a month. "We are in trouble in Iraq," says retired Army general Barry McCaffrey. "Our forces can't sustain this pace, and I'm afraid the American people are walking away from this war." Marine Gen. Peter Pace, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, has clamped a tight security lid on the increasingly pessimistic reports coming out of field commanders in Iraq, threatening swift action against any military personnel who leak details to the press or public.

Bush Regime Shames U.S. by Defending Israel's Attacks on Civilians

"There is no moral equivalence between the civilian casualties from the Israeli raids in Lebanon and those killed in Israel from "malicious terrorist acts," according to US Ambassador John Bolton at the United Nations. "I think it would be a mistake to ascribe moral equivalence to civilians who die as the direct result of malicious terrorist acts," he added, while defending as "self-defense" Israel's military action, which has had "the tragic and unfortunate consequence of civilian deaths." The overall civilian death toll from the Israeli onslaught in Lebanon is estimated to be in excess of 1,500.

The Non-White Illegal Invasion Drains $10bn a Year from Federal Budget

According to a report by the Center for Immigration Studies, the average illegal immigrant family uses $2,700 more in services annually than they pay in taxes. In 2002, this amounted to a $10.4 billion drain on the federal budget. The U.S. Justice Department also reported that in 2003, 270,000 illegal immigrants had served prison time.

Homeland Security Contracts Swindles

The multibillion-dollar surge in federal contracting to bolster America's domestic defenses in the wake of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks has been marred by extensive waste and misspent funds, according to a new bipartisan congressional report. Lawmakers say that since the Homeland Security Department's formation in 2003, an explosion of no-bid deals and a critical shortage of trained government contract managers have created a system prone to abuse. Based on a comprehensive survey of hundreds of government audits, 32 Homeland Security Department contracts worth a total of $34 billion have "experienced significant overcharges, wasteful spending, or mismanagement," according to the report.

Jews Take More than Half of All 'Homeland Security' Money

Jews have grabbed more than half of the Homeland Security funds last year aimed at protecting nonprofits — and they're campaigning to make sure the money keeps flowing. An array of Jewish groups nationwide is just now beginning to spend the $14 million of the $25 million mandated by Congress in 2005 to secure 'at-risk nonprofit groups.' "We believe there is a critical threat against Jewish community assets in the United States," William Daroff, the UJC's vice president for public policy and its top Washington lobbyist, told the Jewish Telegraphic Agency. "We must help protect our hospitals, schools, community centers, synagogues, and churches from terrorist violence," Senator Barbara Mikulski (D-Md.) said. The $14 million that Jewish groups received in the 2005 budget reached 18 communities: Atlanta; Baltimore; Broward County, Fla.; Boston; Chicago; Dallas; the Washington metropolitan area; Houston; Los Angeles; Long Beach, Calif.; Metrowest, N.J.; Miami; New York; Philadelphia; Portland, Ore.; San Diego; San Francisco; and Seattle.

No organization could apply for more than $100,000, though some federations received more because they housed multiple applicants on the same campus. Most states bar the listing of individual groups for security reasons, but it's known that New York's Jewish community was by far the leader in receiving funds, getting about $4.5 million of $6.3 million allocated to nonprofits in the city.

Jews Attack Christian Tourists in Jerusalem – No "Hate Crime" Charges

Fifty pro-Israel Christian tourists were attacked in June by 100 Jews from the ultra-Orthodox neighborhood of Mea She'arim in Jerusalem. Three tourists and a police officer were wounded. The tourists were wearing orange t-shirts with the words "Love your neighbor as yourself" printed across them. As they neared one of the squares, the Jews identified them as Christians and began to hit them. Police say they are waiting for the tourists to file official complaints.

Non-White Invaders Draining Irish Economy

The Irish Republic has spent more than $1.3 billion on utterly bogus non-White asylum seekers over the past three years, but the authorities still don't know the whereabouts of over 6,000 people singled out for deportation. Of the 69,652 asylum applications made to date almost as many applicants have evaded deportation as those who have been granted asylum there. The Department of Justice said that while 8,274 people have been granted asylum it was proving "difficult to track" the whereabouts of another 6,337. They are deemed to have "gone missing" or evaded deportation.

Austrian Freedom Party Confirms Strache as Lead Candidate

Austria's pro-White populist Freedom Party (FPÖ) has formally designated party boss Heinz-Christian Strache as its leading candidate in this autumn's national elections, as he warned against Austrians becoming a minority in their own country and reaffirmed his opposition to Turkey joining the EU. Strache, 37, repeated his opposition to Austria taking in any more foreigners. He said Turkey had no business joining the EU and warned that if Romania and Bulgaria join as expected next year, "hundreds of thousands of Gypsies are waiting to come to us. We are becoming a minority in our own country. It is a fight for survival." Strache recently caused a stir by saying he had no problem with party officials greeting one another with "heil" — a salute many associate with Hitler. A petition launched by the FPÖ in March against the EU and Turkey's accession to the bloc, titled "Keep Austria Free!", in only one week gained 258,277 signatures, some 4.28 percent of the electorate.

Non-Whites Warned About Visiting Russia

Non-Whites visiting Russia should "beware of young, aggressive radical nationalists" according to Worldpress report. "Attacks against people of other nationalities, on the streets and in the Metro, have been rising. Some of the victims have died as a result of being assaulted." St. Petersburg, Moscow, and Voronezh are known to be the most hostile cities for immigrants from Africa, Latin America, and Central Asia. In 2004, 254 attacks involving "racial bias" were registered. In 2005, the number had grown to 394, as reported by the Moscow-based Sova Center. According to the Center's statistics, since the beginning of 2006 more than 100 people have allegedly been attacked by radical nationalists, with 14 of the victims dying as a result."

Eugenics Makes a Comeback: New Embryo Test Screens for 6,000 Diseases

The much maligned – but actually highly beneficial – science of genetics has received a welcome boost with the announcement that British fertility specialists have developed a powerful new way to test embryos for inherited diseases, offering hundreds of couples their first realistic chance of having healthy children. The procedure has been hailed as a big advance, boosting the number of diseases clinics can test for from about 200 to nearly 6,000. It will allow doctors to test for the first time a vast array of inherited diseases for which the specific genetic mutation is not known, such as Duchenne's muscular dystrophy (DMD) and some forms of cystic fibrosis.

48 Greek Nationalists Arrested in Day of Drama

Authorities in Greece forcibly stopped the Patriotic Alliance's (Patriotike Symmachia) annual June rally in the city of Thessaloniki, at the demand of far leftist groups, sparking off a day of high drama which saw 48 Greek patriots arrested.

The Greek patriots had taken up position under a statue of Alexander the Great in Thessaloniki since early in the morning, in order to guard it from threatened attacks by several far-leftist groups. It was this group which was, without warning and completely unprovoked, attacked by numerous police officers, forcing them – without any order of the state attorney — to leave the area.

As a result, at the time of the patriots' withdrawal, several anarchists took over the terrain and started damaging the surrounding area – all with the apparent approval of the state. The nationalists then took their protest to the local state television station and gathered inside actually broadcast building.

Special police squads then surrounded, and arrested 48 of them, all senior members. They were taken into the city's police headquarters where five different charges where laid against them. At the same time many friends and members of the Movement were detained and driven (also illegally) back to Athens by the police.

Heroes of Our Race Part Three: Henry Ford

movement in America. We have just had his anti-Jewish articles translated and published. The book is being circulated to millions throughout Germany."

After 1933, it became an item of Nazi propaganda; every schoolchild in Germany came into contact with it many times during his education. The manager of the Ford Company in Germany in the mid-1930s, Edmund C. Heine (an American citizen), explained that The International Jew had the backing of the German government and was an important factor in educating the nation "to understand the Jewish problem as it should be understood."

In 1938 the German consul at Cleveland gave Henry the award of the Grand Cross of the German Eagle, the highest medal that Nazi Germany could bestow on a foreigner. Henry was the first American and the fourth person given this award. The decoration was given "in recognition of Ford's pioneering in making motor cars available for the masses." The award was accompanied by a personal congratulatory message from Hitler.

The "Retraction" Which Never Was

When Henry finally ceased publication of the Dearborn Independent in 1927, one of its last issued contained a now famous "apology" to the American Jewish Committee, supposedly penned by Henry himself. In the statement, it was ludicrously claimed that Henry "was unaware of the anti-Semitic nature" of his newspaper.

The statement went on to say: "Had I appreciated even the general nature, to say nothing of the details of these utterances, I would have forbidden their circulation without a moment's hesitation . . . "

In actual fact, Henry never wrote the apology, and never signed it, even though it was presented as such. The letter had been composed by the chairman of the American Jewish Committee himself, and signed by one of Ford's aides, Harry Bennett, who revealed the facts in his book We Never Called Him Henry. The whole arrangement was part of a negotiated settlement for a libel lawsuit. The Dearborn Independent had accused a prominent labor organizer of being part of a conspiracy of Jewish bankers to seize control of national wheat production and turn it over to the Communists. The organizer filed a $1 million libel suit against the paper, and Henry ordered Bennett to do whatever was necessary to settle rather than end up in court.

Bennett described the events as follows in his book: "I got in touch with Arthur Brisbane, and through him learned that the American Jewish Committee could

Henry Ford and the Negroes

Henry Ford was, like all of his contemporaries, a White Supremacist, and not a White Separatist. As a result, although he personally opposed racial miscegenation, he offered Negroes work in his factories (illustration below, Negro workers in a Ford factory) and, ultimately, thereby contributed to the eventual destruction of Detroit by that race. He was, however, not the only employer to do so, and, when his other utterances on Negroes are considered, it is without doubt that had he seen the ultimate consequences of his use of Negro labor, he would have in all likelihood desisted from that practice. He expressly remarked that Whites were more intelligent than non-Whites and, in the Dearborn Independent's articles on Jewish influence on music, said that Negro and Jewish influences were dragging American culture to the jungle: "Then came the Jews; the popular song underwent a change. An entirely new crop of titles appeared dealing with an entirely different series of subjects than the songs they displaced. Talented singers, tuneful singing vanished. The Jew and the African period, being the entrance of the jungle motif, the so-called "Congo" stuff, and other compositions which swiftly degenerated into a rather more bestial type than the beasts themselves arrive at."

settle the matter. I entered into negotiations with Samuel Untermeyer and Louis Marshall of that organization, and with Brisbane. They drew up the now-famous "apology," which was to be the basis for a settlement. In this formal statement, it was said that Mr. Ford would see to it that no more anti-Semitic material circulated in his name and that he would call in all undistributed copies of The International Jew, which were booklet reprints of the Independent's articles. For the rest, the "apology" said that Mr. Ford had had no knowledge of what had been published in the Dearborn Independent, and was "shocked" and "mortified" to learn about it. Arthur Brisbane brought this statement to me at 1710 Broadway. I phoned Mr. Ford. I told him an "apology" had been drawn up, and added: "It's pretty bad, Mr. Ford." I tried to read it to him over the phone, but he stopped me.

"I don't care how bad it is," Mr. Ford said. "The worse they make it, the better. You sign it, and settle the thing up." So I signed Mr. Ford's signature to the document. I had always been able to sign his name as realistically as he could himself. I sent the statement to Untermeyer and Marshall. The signature was verified, and the case was closed."

Henry subsequently became associated with the famous American patriot, Gerald L.K. Smith, who commented upon meeting Ford in the 1930s that he "was less anti-Semitic than Ford." Smith also remarked that in 1940, Ford showed "no regret" for the Independent's anti-Semitic views, and "hoped to publish The International Jew again some time." In the same year Ford told the Manchester Guardian that "international Jewish bankers" were responsible for Word War II.

Ill Health and Retirement

In 1938, the 75-year old Henry suffered a stroke. In failing health, he turned over the running of his company to his son, Edsel. By now, war clouds were gathering, and although Henry kept close contact with the America First Committee through his close friend Charles Lindbergh, the outbreak of the war, his advancing age and his ill health, saw Henry slowly withdraw from political controversy. The 79-year old Henry only came briefly out of retirement when his son Edsel died unexpectedly in 1943. He ran the Ford motor company for two years, but his obvious advancing senility caused him to cede the presidency to his grandson Henry Ford II in September 1945.

Henry went into retirement, and died in 1947 of a cerebral hemorrhage at the age of 83 in Fair Lane, his Dearborn estate, and is buried in the Ford Cemetery in Detroit.

Parade of Jews Broken Up by Students at Jassy and Many Are Beaten.

BUCHAREST, Rumania, Dec. 19 (Jewish Telegraphic Agency).—A large number of Jews at Jassy were severely beaten and three of them were wounded when a mob of students attacked a demonstration yesterday which was arranged by Jews as a protest against attacks on Jews throughout the country. The object of the parade was to point out the need for Government protection of the Jews, who, the leaders declare, have been made the object of nationwide aggression in order to bring about repeal of the constitutional clauses guaranteeing their complete enfranchisement.

Much later, a letter, supposedly written by Henry to the leader of the Anti-Defamation League, Sigmund Livingston, dated January 7, 1942, denouncing anti-Semitism was released, but there is no evidence that Henry ever wrote nor signed this letter, and the fact that it appears on a Ford Motor Company letterhead, at a time when he was in retirement and would not have been at the office, is cause to question its authenticity.

Even in death, Henry's enemies continued to plot against him, but his steadfastness in the face of adversity, his engineering genius and his willingness to back up his beliefs with money, even at great personal cost, are a lesson from which White Nationalists across the world can learn.

DNA genome would not be sequenced until 14 April, 2003. To the average person this does not mean much, except that it spawned movies of Dinosaurs coming back to life as "mad scientists" re-create dinosaur DNA. Although not yet done, bringing the dinosaurs back to life based on recovered DNA is now theoretically possible.

Creatures differ in their DNA. Humans normally have 23 pairs. Horses have 32. Dogs have 49. Ferns have 630. A human child with Down syndrome has either an extra chromosome or has two chromosomes joined together. Genetic diseases are making physical sense for the first time.

PRACTICAL GENETICS

To White Nationalists, the study of genetics is of immense benefit as this knowledge can be used in planning a future White society where our people can hope to survive. Only by respecting Nature and its rules can we optimize our survival chances, and the laws of genetics have many spin-offs that are as yet not fully understood, but are politically usable. One such study is discovering the physical molecular basis for our uniqueness as a distinct human race.

Our genes code our intelligence, skin color, skull shape, number of fingers, bone size and every other facet of our physical humanity. Liberal political programs in the U.S. and other White countries are all dysgenic in that they favor the worst genes and discriminate against the good genes in our DNA. Children are much like their parents in most ways – though there are exceptions to the rule.

A eugenic environment would ensure that the healthiest, most mentally stable, most intelligent people had the most children. Our society is the exact opposite, exhibiting dysgenic trends where intelligent folk have few or no children, and the mentally retarded are permitted to breed and create a future generation that is even more retarded physically and mentally.

Liberal academics have long argued that most human variation is due to the environment; but genetic studies have now proven that the environment plays a small role in factors such as intelligence, criminal tendencies, social responsibility, and general value to society.

Gregor Mendel

It is our genetics that largely determines whether we feel strong kinship with our own people or prefer the variety of alien races. Many moral traits such as monogamy and motherhood are also founded in our genes.

Clearly the study of genetics has strong political overtones, which is why liberals prefer backward dysgenics and despise racially healthy eugenics. This is all the more reason for White Nationalists to study genetics so that we never go against Mother Nature with our political agendas. By following the laws of Nature we stand the best chance of surviving as a race.

The science of genetics has split into various disciplines and more people choose vocations in this line than ever before.

> Classical genetics – does not make use of molecular biology; makes use of established methods such as hybridization; still useful for studying many genetic diseases

> Behavioral genetics – study of the influence of genetics on animal and human behavior

> Molecular genetics – study of the function of genes at a molecular level

> Population genetics – study of the four evolutionary forces in nature: (1) natural selection (2) genetic drift (3) mutation (4) migration; attempts to explain adaptation and speciation

> Genomics – study of large-scale genetic patterns across the genome for a given species

> Molecular biology – the union of biochemistry and genetics

> Genetic engineering – where genetic material of an organism is modified for a particular purpose. E.g. creating square tomatoes that conveniently straddle a sandwich.

The last discipline, genetic engineering, has perhaps drawn most opposition from scientists and the public. Whereas before only Nature created new life

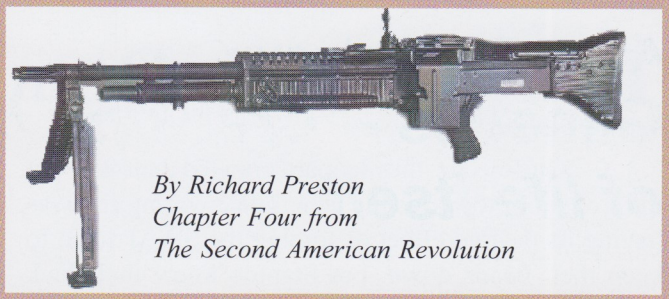
The Traitor's Demise



By Richard Preston
Chapter Four from
The Second American Revolution

The dull thud of a flash grenade announced the FBI SWAT team's arrival. Stanton and the other men in the White Liberation Army cell from Roanoke, Virginia, were in a tight spot, and they knew it. The first two squad members stumbled back into the bungalow, their eyes searing from the flash grenade blast. This would be a serious firefight, Stanton thought.

After the bombing of the Two Million Man March and the resultant sack of Washington DC, the authorities had emerged from their state of inertia and disbelief into which they had fallen following the assassinations of the office-holding Jews, and had now realized they were dealing not with a handful of nuts, but a real, fully fledged insurrection.

Their first step was to invoke the powers of the Patriot VI act, which had the immediate effect of suspending all civil liberties, freedom of speech and press included, and placing the entire country under effective military rule. This was exactly what the WLA had hoped would happen, as it instantly forced large numbers of militia types into the conflict, who otherwise wouldn't have got involved. Suddenly the state found a rebellion on its hands which was far more widespread than even the WLA had planned, and from all over the country, reports were coming in of random acts of anarchy, weapons seizures and, even in some cases, of some small White army units refusing to follow orders to attack Whites who were arming themselves, in contravention to the Patriot VI Act.

Simultaneously the state had arrested every single prominent above ground White Nationalist leader it could, including some utterly inconsequential grouplets who were just as in the dark as anyone else. All that did was heighten the tension. The next few weeks would prove critical to determining if the revolution would actually succeed.

But right now, Stanton was more concerned with getting out the immediate danger. The Roanoke cell had established a safe house on the shores of the Smith Mountain Lake, which lay to the southwest of the city. Thickly wooded and peaceful, it was a place unlikely to attract attention – yet the FBI had found them. Stanton looked around the bungalow – there was one man missing, Humphrey. He made a mental note – why was he not there? There was no time for anything further. The sensor beams had indicated that the SWAT team was approaching on all three sides of the lake-facing house.

Bizarre, Stanton thought, that they had not covered the Lake itself. Ordering the two men armed with the unit's only M60 machine gun, to set up behind the steel plated cone, designed specifically for such an occasion, facing the door leading directly up the road. The M60, although an old design, was still a workhorse of great firepower, firing linked 7.62 × 51 mm NATO cartridges at a tremendous and deadly rate.

Two other unit members took up position in specially constructed steel plated pods on either side of the bungalow interior, facing north and south. They were armed with the more modern M240 medium machine guns, all long since 'liberated' from an Army base out in California. Each man knew their task: they were to provide covering fire to the rest of the squad who were to creep out the front of the house, towards the lake, where the rubber dinghies were hidden under an inconspicuous wooden pier. It was their only chance of escape.

"Surrender now and come out with your hands up," came the loudspeaker instruction, the accent full of Hispanic intonation.

"Can you see any of them?" Stanton asked the gun teams. "Negative," came the reply from the north squad. A second or two passed, and then the other two teams confirmed they could. "All right, as soon as they make a move, let them have it," Stanton said.

No sooner had the words left his mouth then the front door team opened up. The belt feed clunked around, and the weapon spat out a long flame, interrupted by short spaces, as the gunner paused every burst to reduce the chance of a blockage. Stanton and the other unit team hit the floor: they knew what would come next.

The SWAT team returned fire, but they were clearly outgunned, as they had not expected such heavy weaponry to be arraigned against them. Stanton waited for all the guns to establish a routine, and then gave the order to leave the house to the rest of the squad.

One by one, they leopard crawled their way out the front door to wards the lake. The covering fire was having its desired effect of forcing the SWAT team to keep their heads down, but Stanton knew their luck wouldn't hold. Sure enough, it was less than a minute when the forward SWAT team members spotted the would-be escapees. A sharp shooter opened fire, and two unit members were killed instantly. Stanton and the other men rolled for cover, one even made it into the water, which provided an excellent deflector for the fire being rained upon them.

Stanton slid his AR-180 assault rifle off his shoulder, glad once again that he had selected the version with the folding stock. From behind a small rock, he looked around for the telltale puff of smoke from the SWAT sharp shooter. He didn't have to wait long – there, in the bushes not 400 feet from the side of the bungalow.

Taking careful aim, he squeezed the trigger in definite short sharp bursts, one, two, three, four, five. He saw the leaves of the bush flutter as the rounds struck home, and then, he saw the SWAT shooter fall backwards from his cover position.

"OK guys, let's go," Stanton shouted. The man in the water had already swum to the dinghies, had pulled off the covers and had started two of the three boats' outboard motors. Stanton fired the air siren, the signal to the gun teams in the house to finish up and withdraw, and to the men outside to set up covering fire for them to join with the rest of the team. The plan worked well, and within five minutes, the gun teams had joined the unit members on the muddy banks of the lake, with covering fire still keeping the SWAT team at bay.

As quickly as they could, the team leaped into the dinghies, and to the stunned amazement of the SWAT team, sped off across the lake, down the channel to the Leesville Lake, where back-up escape vehicles had long since been stored.

They had lost four men, out of 18. Given the circumstances, it was a miracle that so many had escaped, thought Stanton.

The WLA team regrouped in the next cell's safe house in Clifton Forge. There, they discussed how the SWAT team had managed to find them, and the answer wasn't long in the coming. "I saw Humphrey with the SWAT team commander," Peter Jackson, the one machine gunner said. "I fired a good long burst at them, and they hit the dirt, but I don't think I got them."

Stanton wondered how Humphrey had gotten through the rigorous screening process to which all WLA core activists were subjected. Each man or woman had to be agree to be injected with Sodium Pentothal, the closest thing there was to a "truth serum" (which didn't exist, really, all the injection did was interfere with judgment and higher cognitive function, and thus make it more difficult, but not impossible, to lie) and each person's background was thoroughly investigated.

Possibly the only explanation for Humphrey's behavior was that he had cracked under the strain and had turned traitor after the fact. Whatever the case, he knew that breaking his WLA oath was a death sentence, and he would now be in hiding.

Stanton stood up. "OK men, wait here. If I am not back in two days, move on without me. We can't let traitors know they can get away with it, otherwise it will only encourage others," he said, putting down his assault rifle and picking up a .22 from the trunk of weapons. Everyone knew what he meant.

Stanton's luck was in. Obviously because it had not happened before, Humphrey didn't think it would actually happen, and presumed the unit would flee as far away as possible from Roanoke. Stanton spotted Humphrey straight away in the FBI car leaving the Franklin Road offices of the FBI offices after just a day's observation. It was ridiculously easy to follow the vehicle to the FBI safe house in nearby Blacksburg. They must think they are dealing with fools, thought Stanton.

Waiting until dark on the outskirts of the town, Stanton made his move at one a.m., when the FBI guards would be at the least aware.

The house that they had chosen was on the outskirts of the town, near the golf course. They had selected it because of the quietness of the area, and this was another thing in Stanton's favor – there was no-one around at that time of night.

Stepping up to the main window, Stanton peered carefully in. He could see a light from a back room, probably the two FBI men's accommodation. Screwing on the silencer, and pulling on his black gloves, Stanton made his way round to the back of the house. Sure enough, the two Negro FBI agents were fast asleep in front the TV set, one snoring quite loudly. They didn't even know what happened – two quick silenced shots, close up through the small open window, struck them neatly in the back of the head.

Stanton pushed open the larger window by reaching through the small open one, and climbed into the house. Humphrey would be upstairs. The stairs creaked slightly, but not enough to wake anybody, Stanton hoped. There were four rooms upstairs. The one with the closed door was the obvious target.

Shoving open the door, Stanton burst in. Humphrey sat bolt upright in the bed. He didn't say a word, and neither did Stanton as he shot the traitor dead. From then on, only three instances of traitors were ever to occur in the WLA again.

Back at base, the order had come through: move all operations back West into the Appalachians and regroup into a formal unit. Stanton knew it, but the others didn't – the time had come to start grouping in formalized units, as opposed to the guerilla tactics of the past few months. There had been enough hits on the establishment, and enough defections of Whites from the system, to come out into the open. The first phase of the revolution had been successful: now would come the drawn out clash which would decide its ultimate outcome.

forms, now humans have acquired the power to create life. The U.S. and several other military Frankenstein's have a vested interest in creating the most monstrous germs imaginable. They, of course, think that they will not lose control of their monster creations; but most people do not trust Frankenstein.

Reality, unfortunately, predicts that there is nothing we can do to prevent genetic engineers from creating their monsters, except in the short-term. Just as there was no stopping the Industrial Revolution and Information Revolution, the genetic engineering revolution will go mainstream despite opposition; and we will have to absorb the consequences… and there will be vast consequences. The White race has always been at the forefront of science and discovery. It is the same with genetics. A long line of White luminaries have shown the way and it is up to us to follow in their footsteps.

First we have to encourage our children to overcome the barriers placed by the dumbed-down education systems that are geared to the Third World. Preferably home school your children and use distance-education instead of sending them to college. A wall of separation between us and our dysgenic environment is the best start we can give our children so that their precious genes might survive the troubled times that lie ahead for the White race.

On Being Light -- Jim Ring's The Bell

Humor is a tool in our arsenal for survival. It can help us to keep our heads on straight; stay in control of ourselves and not fall victim to the desperation of blindly lashing out; doing little if any damage to the enemy; and thus either destroying ourselves or giving the system an excuse to throw us in their dungeons for the better years of our lives.

Working to improve our outlook and disposition will help us to build a stronger community and this will multiply our strength as individuals as well. Those that have achieved "light" are confident in the ultimate victory of their cause despite the current situation. They know that despite whatever misfortune may fall on them personally, that they are but a single unit of many who are the birth agents of the next New Age, announced gloriously by that extraordinary personality just in the last century, bringing the world a living example through a Germany reborn. Thus we know the dream is real and attainable. It will be a measure of how much we really want to achieve this goal; what are we willing to sacrifice that is more of a determinant than the omnipresence of the power of the enemy.

That's what the National Alliance is about. Despite its daily challenges, obstacles, and sometimes setbacks, Alliance members keep their focus meeting the struggle with good spirit and confidence in its eventual victory. That's something to feel good about. Come join us! Become a part of this historical mission!

White Separatism is the Key

Sir, - Congratulations on the "White Separatism" article in #131. You are absolutely spot on – no-one but a lunatic would actually want to rule over non-Whites of any number, and we all have to understand this fundamental truth between White Supremacy and White Separatism. "White Supremacy" allows the enemy to typecast us as people who want to oppress Blacks and other non-Whites, when in fact we want nothing to do with them at all. We should all start using the term "White Separatist" everywhere we go, and force it down the media's throats, in letters to the editor and all public actions. – RS, CA.

Was Lincoln Right?

Sir, - Your article "White Separatism, Our Ideal Our Destiny" (NV # 131) was timely and greatly needed. It pains me to see so many in the White Nationalist movement clinging to the belief that the Confederate South as the 'good guys' in the Civil War. The truth is that the Confederates were wrong, and Abraham Lincoln was right. Why do I say this? Simply because an honest assessment of the Civil War protagonists' policies reveals that the Confederates wanted to keep Negro slaves under their thumb, and in America, while Lincoln's aim was to free them, and then deport them all back to Africa. In an 1862 address to a Negro group called the "Deputation of Free Negroes" who had come to plead for full emancipation, Lincoln told them that they should all return to Africa and start a free Black colony there. He told them: "Even when you cease to be slaves, you are yet far removed from being placed on equality with the White race. On this broad continent, not a single man of your race is made the equal of a single man of ours. But for your race among us there would be no war, although many men engaged on either side do not care for you one way or the other. It is better for us both, therefore, to be separated." (The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln, Vol. V, pages 371-375) Even Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation contained a plea for the deportation of the Negroes from America. "I can conceive of no greater calamity that the assimilation of the Negro into our social and political life as our equal. Within twenty years we can peacefully colonize the Negro and give him our language, literature, religion, and system of government under conditions in which he can rise to the full measure of manhood. This he can never do here. We can never attain the ideal union our fathers dreamed, with millions of an alien, inferior race among us, whose assimilation is neither possible nor desirable." (The Collected Works of Abraham Lincoln, Vol. V, pages 371-375)

At the time of his assassination, Lincoln was piloting a bill through Congress which would have seen Negroes being sent back to Africa. His death also meant the death of the bill. But no-one can dispute that America would have been better off without the Negroes, as Lincoln wanted, than with them, as is presently the case — and what the White Supremacists of the Confederacy wanted. – SD, GA

Spanish History Fascinating!

Sir, - Please pass on my congratulations to Erich Gliebe for his series of remarkable articles on the history of Spain. Would he have the time to write something on Franco and that part of Spanish history, as it seems to be very unclear what exactly happened there, particularly his on-off relationship with Hitler. Would World War II have turned out differently had Spain entered the war on the Axis' side? It's an interesting question. – FS, WA

Keep the Message Pure!

Sir, - In response to your correspondent who wrote that the "NA Message is too Harsh" (Letters, #31) allow me to respond: NO WAY. There are more than enough conservative groups who are 'opposed to immigration but it's not a race thing' and groups who ignore the Jewish question, but we in the National Alliance are not one of those groups. Dr. William Pierce set our course, and we will follow the map he laid down for us. No compromise, no surrender. – GC, IA

Will "Heroes of our Race" be a Book?

Sir, - I really like what you are doing with the "Heroes of our Race" series. It is such a welcome break from all the negative propaganda which fills the pages of other White Nationalist publications, to read something positive which fills one with pride and admiration for our race. Is the series going to be published in book form at any stage? – HG, VA

Logical Book Education List Needed

Sir, - Someone posted this suggestion on the Resistance.com board. I think it is an excellent idea, and would ask you to please give serious consideration to implementing it:

"We pick out the books in the catalog that are the most important for understanding the Alliance's ideology — a "must have" list — and suggest a sequence of logical and orderly progression of procuring the books that will enable people to have a real foundation in our philosophy. In other words, an education. Education is more than just a jumble of information. An education consists of prioritized material absorbed in a logical sequence building up from basics.

Having an organized mind is essential for a good debater, allowing one to triumph over the sophist arguments of the multicult. We could eventually put out a syllabus to accompany the books."

Please give this consideration, as it would be very valuable for home schooling.– FJ, TX

We Can Reach Other Planets... But Can We Save Ourselves?

There seems to be no limit to the technological prowess of our race. From the depths of the ocean, to the moon and the stars, our handiwork can be seen.

Yet, right here, at home, on our own planet, we are in mortal danger.

We are being dispossessed of our lands. Immigrants from Third World countries – peoples who do not share our ideals, visions and aspirations — are pouring into our countries, aided and abetted by those traitors in government who are colluding with the downfall of our nations.

Demographic projections show that we are set to become a minority in all of our lands before the end of this century and, in many cases, far sooner than that.

This will mean the extinction of our civilization, and all we hold dear.

Will you let it happen?

The National Alliance is America's foremost organization actively working towards preventing the endless night from falling across our race.

Why don't you find out more by contacting us today.
